

‘After lunch all the youth of the city go out onto the fields to take part in the ball game. The students of each school have their own ball. The workers from each city craft also carry balls. Older citizens, fathers and wealthy men come on horseback to watch the juniors competing and to revive their own youth. You can see their inner passions aroused as they watch the action and get caught up in the fun.’

The first description of mob football played in London on Shrove Tuesday, written by William Fitzstephen in 1174

Is this source useful for telling me about ...	Yes	Not sure	No	Evidence to suggest that the source is useful for this purpose
1. ... what mob football was like in London?
2. ... how many people got hurt in mob football?
3. ... how common mob football was in London?
4. ... education in medieval times?
5. ... how business was organised?
6. ... different classes of people in medieval London?
7. ... life in the 12 th century (1100s)?
8. ... what women did in London?
9. ... whether medieval people had fun?
10. ... whether mob football was played all over the country?				